defined as the study of ‘intelligent agents’ : any device that perceives its environment and takes actions that maximise its chance of successfully achieving its goals. Colloquially, the term ‘artificial intelligence, is applied when a machine mimics ‘cognitive’ functions that humans associate with other human minds such as ‘learning’ and ‘problem solving’.

The scope of AI is disputed as machines become increasingly capable, tasks considered as requiring ‘intelligence’ are often removed from the definition, a phenomenon known as the AI effect leading to the quip, “AI is whatever has not been done yet.” Capabilities, generally classified as AI as of 2017 include successfully understanding human speech, competing at the highest level in strategic game systems (such as chess and Go), autonomous cars, intelligent routing in content delivery network and military stimulations.

AI was introduced as an Academic discipline in 1956 and in the years since has experienced several faces and waves of 'optimism', followed by disappointment and the loss of funding (known as AI winter) followed by new approaches, success and removed funding.

The traditional problems (or goals) of AI research include reasoning, knowledge, representation, planning, learning, natural language processing, the ability to move and manipulate objects. Many tools are used in AI, including versions of search and mathematical optimization, artificial neural networks, and methods based on statistics, probability and economics.
